

---

SENATE COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC SAFETY

Senator Nancy Skinner, Chair

2017 - 2018 Regular

---

Bill No: AB 702                      Hearing Date: June 27, 2017
Author: Lackey
Version: March 27, 2017
Urgency: No                              Fiscal: Yes
Consultant: MK

Subject: Driving Under the Influence: Chemical Tests

HISTORY

Source: California District Attorneys Association

Prior Legislation: None

Support: ACIC; California Police Chiefs Association; San Diego County District Attorney

Opposition: California Attorneys for Criminal Justice; California Public Defenders Association

Assembly Floor Vote: 77 - 0

PURPOSE

The purpose of this bill is to modify California law as it relates to refusal to submit to a chemical test due to suspicion of driving under the influence (DUI) to comply with the Supreme Court's ruling in Birchfield v. North Dakota, (2016) 136 S. Ct. 2160.

Existing law states that if any person is convicted of a violation of driving under the influence (DUI), and at the time of the arrest leading to that conviction that person willfully refused a peace officer's request to submit to, or willfully failed to complete, the chemical test or tests, the court shall impose the following penalties: (Vehicle Code, § 23577 (a).)

- a) If the person is convicted of a first violation of a DUI as specified, the punishment proscribed for a first-offense DUI shall be imposed;
- b) If the person is convicted of a second violation of a DUI, the punishment shall be enhanced by an imprisonment of 96 hours in the county jail, whether or not probation is granted and no part of which may be stayed, unless the person is sentenced to, and incarcerated in, the state prison and execution of that sentence is not stayed;
- c) If the person is convicted of a third violation of a DUI, the punishment shall be enhanced by an imprisonment of 10 days in the county jail, whether or not probation is granted and no part of which may be stayed; and

- d) If the person is convicted of a fourth or subsequent DUI violation, the punishment shall be enhanced by imprisonment of 18 days in the county jail, whether or not probation is granted and no part of which may be stayed.

Existing law provides that person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of his or her blood, if lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of specified DUI offenses. If a blood or breath test, or both, are unavailable, then a urine test is required as specified. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(1)(A).)

Existing law states that a person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her blood for the purpose of determining the drug content of his or her blood, if lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of Section specified DUI offenses. If a blood test is unavailable, the person shall be deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her urine and shall submit to a urine test. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (a)(1)(B).)

Existing law provides that the testing shall be incidental to a lawful arrest and administered at the direction of a peace officer having reasonable cause to believe the person was driving a motor vehicle in violation of specified DUI offenses. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (a)(1)(C).)

Existing law specifies that the person shall be told that his or her failure to submit to, or the failure to complete, the required chemical testing will result in a fine, mandatory imprisonment if the person is convicted of a DUI, and:

- a) The suspension of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of one year,
- b) The revocation of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of two years if the refusal occurs within 10 years of a separate violation DUI offense; or
- c) The revocation of the person's privilege to operate a motor vehicle for a period of three years if the refusal occurs within 10 years of two or more separate DUI violations, as specified. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(1)(D).)

Existing law provides that if the person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of an alcoholic beverage, the person has the choice of whether the test shall be of his or her blood or breath and the officer shall advise the person that he or she has that choice. If the person arrested either is incapable, or states that he or she is incapable, of completing the chosen test, the person shall submit to the remaining test. If a blood or breath test, or both, are unavailable, the person shall submit to the remaining test in order to determine the percent, by weight, of alcohol in the person's blood. If both the blood and breath tests are unavailable, the person shall be deemed to have given his or her consent to chemical testing of his or her urine and shall submit to a urine test. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (a)(2)(A).)

Existing law states that if the person is lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of any drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and any drug, the person has the choice of whether the test shall be of his or her blood or breath, and the officer shall advise the person that he or she has that choice. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(2)(B).)

Existing law states that a person who chooses to submit to a breath test may also be requested to submit to a blood test if the officer has reasonable cause to believe that the person was driving under the influence of a drug or the combined influence of an alcoholic beverage and a drug and if the officer has a clear indication that a blood test will reveal evidence of the person being under the influence. The officer shall state in his or her report the facts upon which that belief and that clear indication are based. The officer shall advise the person that he or she is required to submit to an additional test. The person shall submit to and complete a blood test. If the person arrested is incapable of completing the blood test, the person shall submit to and complete a urine test. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(2)(C).)

Existing law provides that if the person is lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed in violation of a specified DUI offense, and, because of the need for medical treatment, the person is first transported to a medical facility where it is not feasible to administer a particular test of, or to obtain a particular sample of, the person's blood or breath, the person has the choice of those tests, including a urine test, that are available at the facility to which that person has been transported. In that case, the officer shall advise the person of those tests that are available at the medical facility and that the person's choice is limited to those tests that are available. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(3).)

Existing law provides that an officer shall also advise the person that he or she does not have the right to have an attorney present before stating whether he or she will submit to a test or tests, before deciding which test or tests to take, or during administration of the test or tests chosen, and that, in the event of refusal to submit to a test or tests, the refusal may be used against him or her in a court of law. (Vehicle Code § 23612 (a)(4).)

Existing law states that a person who is unconscious or otherwise in a condition rendering him or her incapable of refusal is deemed not to have withdrawn his or her consent and a test or tests may be administered whether or not the person is told that his or her failure to submit to, or the noncompletion of, the test or tests will result in the suspension or revocation of his or her privilege to operate a motor vehicle. A person who is dead is deemed not to have withdrawn his or her consent and a test or tests may be administered at the direction of a peace officer. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (a)(5).)

Existing law specifies that a person who is afflicted with hemophilia is exempt from the blood test required by this section, but shall submit to, and complete, a urine test. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (b).)

Existing law provides that a person who is afflicted with a heart condition and is using an anticoagulant under the direction of a licensed physician and surgeon is exempt from the blood test required by this section, but shall submit to, and complete, a urine test. (Vehicle Code, § 23612 (c).)

Existing law states that a person lawfully arrested for an offense allegedly committed while the person was driving a motor vehicle in violation of specified DUI offenses may request the arresting officer to have a chemical test made of the arrested person's blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic content of that person's blood, and, if so requested, the arresting officer shall have the test performed. (Vehicle Code, § 23612(d))

This bill repeals the implied consent to submit to chemical testing of his or her blood or breath and would instead require a driver who is lawfully arrested for a specified DUI offense to submit to chemical testing of his or her blood or breath for the purpose of determining the alcoholic or drug content of his or her blood:

- a) Requires a peace officer to advise the person, as specified, that he or she has the choice of taking a chemical test, but that failure to take a blood or urine test will result in suspension or revocation of his or her driving privilege, and refusal to take a breath test will result in the same penalty and a fine or mandatory imprisonment if the person is convicted of a specified DUI offense; and
- b) Requires a person exempted from the blood test requirement because of hemophilia or a heart condition, as specified, to submit to, and complete, a breath test or a urine test, as specified.

This bill clarifies that it is a crime for a person to willfully refuse to complete a breath test after being lawfully arrested for a violation of specified driving under the influence offenses.

This bill specifies that the crime for refusal to complete a breath test shall not apply to a person who has submitted to and completed a blood test.

This bill removes a provision of law that requires a court to consider a person's refusal to take a chemical test as a special factor in determining whether to enhance a sentence, grant probation, or set enhanced probation terms when a person's blood is 0.15% or higher.

COMMENTS

1. Need for This Bill

According to the author:

Recent rulings by the Supreme Court of the United States (SCOTUS) require California to update its Driving Under the Influence (DUI) laws.

Current law - Vehicle Code sections 23612, 23577, and 23578 - establishes an "implied consent," which essentially means that a person who drives a motor vehicle is deemed to have given his consent to chemical testing of his blood or breath when lawfully arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol or drugs .

Current law also provides for criminal sanctions for failure to comply with a lawful request to have a biological sample (breath or blood) tested for substances that could impair a person's ability to safely operate a vehicle.

However, these laws are not in compliance with the due process requirements set forth by the Supreme Court of the United States in Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 136 S.Ct. 2160 [195 L.Ed.2d 560].

In Birchfield, and the two companion cases, the SCOTUS ruled that breath testing was not a violation of the Fourth Amendment as it was incident to an arrest, but obtaining a blood sample would require a warrant. This means that “implied consent” does not exist in the case of the blood testing.

Furthermore, according to one of the holdings in Birchfield, supra., a state cannot burden the invocation of the Fourth Amendment protection by a lawfully arrested driver by imposing criminal sanctions on said driver. Such sanctions made the consent or waiver of that protection coerced. However, the justices did approve the use of administrative remedies as a reasonable invocation of the State interest in regulating safety on the roads.

2. Fourth Amendment as Applied to DUI Chemical Tests

The Fourth Amendment protects people from unreasonable searches by the government. A search occurs when the police intrude into a place where a person has a reasonable expectation of privacy, such as a person’s house or even a person’s body. For a search to be reasonable, police are usually required to meet the standard of “probable cause” (having a good reason to search). In most cases, an officer will get a search warrant by providing some information to a judicial official that a crime was committed at the place to be searched or that particular evidence of a crime exists at the location to be searched. This process can go quickly, especially when done over the phone or electronically. If the judicial official agrees that probable cause exists, he or she will issue the warrant.

However, the following examples are instances when police can search without a warrant:

- In a consent search. This is when the person gives permission for the search.
- In a search incident to lawful arrest. This is when a person is lawfully arrested and police can search the person and the area within that person’s immediate control for the officers’ safety.
- When evidence of a crime is in plain view because there is no expectation of privacy in this situation.
- In an exigent circumstances search. This is when there is an emergency or pressing need and not enough time for a police officer to secure a search warrant.

Taking a blood or breath test is referred to as a BAC test (blood alcohol content). A BAC test is considered a search. Having a driver take a breath or blood test is one of the most common ways to gather evidence in a DUI case (driving under the influence). In a breath test, which may occur on the road or at the police station, the driver breathes into a breathalyzer. The purpose is to detect the amount of alcohol in the driver’s body. A blood test that detects alcohol or drugs in the body is usually a more accurate method than the breath test. It is taken by a certified professional, usually at a hospital, who uses a syringe to take blood.

All 50 states have “implied consent laws.” These laws say that drivers automatically give permission to police officers to test for BAC if an officer has reason to believe that a driver is under the influence. If drivers refuse, they can lose their license. However, 12 states, including

North Dakota, go further and make it a separate crime (arrest and potential jail time), apart from how the DUI turns out, for drivers to refuse to let officers test their BAC.<sup>1</sup>

3. Birchfield v. North Dakota

The 2013 case of Danny Birchfield involved a driver in a DUI case who refused to consent to a blood test when requested by an officer. Mr. Birchfield had submitted to a breath test prior to the request, which showed that he was intoxicated. Mr. Birchfield was charged with breaking the implied consent law of North Dakota.

At trial, Mr. Birchfield argued that his Fourth Amendment rights were violated by criminalizing his refusal to be searched when he failed to consent to the blood test. The trial court, and subsequently the Supreme Court of North Dakota ruled that Mr. Birchfield's constitutional rights were not violated when the state of North Dakota criminalized the refusal to take a blood test. The basis of this determination was that the officers only administered the test when they established probable cause to believe that the driver was impaired. Thus, the state courts deemed the search reasonable.

The United States Supreme Court reviewed the decision of the South Dakota Supreme Court because it was based on an interpretation of federal constitutional law. The Supreme Court asked, whether a state can criminalize a refusal to take a blood test, absent a warrant, through an implied consent law. Birchfield v. North Dakota, (2016) 136 S. Ct. 2160, at 2173. The court ruled that the Fourth Amendment permits warrantless breath tests for drunk driving, but does not permit warrantless blood tests. The court determined that breath tests are barely a physical intrusion, as opposed to the blood test which can even leave DNA samples with the government.

4. Refusal

Under California's implied consent laws, a person convicted of a DUI can have additional penalties for refusing a peace officer's request to submit to, or willfully complete a specified chemical test. These additional sanctions raise constitutional questions following the Birchfield case.

This bill instead imposes the administrative sanction of a license suspension or revocation if a person refuses a blood or urine test. It changes the implied consent to chemical testing and provides that when lawfully arrested for a DUI the officer shall inform the person that he or she has a choice to refuse the test but the refusal will then result in the administrative sanction. It would require a peace officer to inform a person lawfully arrested for a DUI that he or she may refuse to submit to the blood or urine test but if he or she does not submit to the test he or she will be subject to license suspension or revocation and if he or she fails to submit to the breath test then he or she will also be subject to potential jail time and fines in addition to the administrative sanctions.

---

<sup>1</sup> According to Street Law, Inc. 2016.

5. Argument in Support

According to the California District Attorneys Association:

This bill would conform California's 'implied consent' DUI law to the due process requirements set forth by the Supreme Court of the United States in Birchfield v. North Dakota (2016) 136 S.Ct. 2160 [195 L.Ed.2d 560].

As you know, existing law provides for criminal sanctions for failure to comply with a lawful request to have a biological sample (breath or blood) tested for substances that could impair a person's ability to safely operate a vehicle. In Birchfield, and the two companion cases, the SCOTUS ruled that breath testing was not a violation of the Fourth Amendment as it was incident to an arrest, but obtaining a blood sample would require a warrant. SCOTUS also held that the usual exceptions to the warrant requirement would also apply.

The reason we need to change California law is that one of the holdings in Birchfield, supra., was that a state could not burden the invocation of the Fourth Amendment protection by imposing criminal sanctions. Such sanctions made the consent or waiver of that protection coerced. However, the justices did approve the use of administrative remedies as a reasonable invocation of the State interest in regulating safety on the roads.

California's statutory scheme for the so-called 'implied consent' law is contained in three sections – Vehicle Code sections 23612, 23577, and 23578. AB 702 will bring this statutory scheme into compliance with Birchfield, supra., by removing the criminal sanctions on a suspected DUI driver for refusing a blood test.

6. Argument in Opposition

California Attorneys for Criminal Justice opposes this bill stating:

CACJ believes that the Birchfield decision must be viewed in context of other relevant laws and court decisions. As you know, the Supreme Court of the United States issued a groundbreaking decision in McNeeley. Most relevant, the McNeeley court declared that in most circumstances a blood draw cannot be undertaken absent a lawfully issued warrant. In addition, many states, including North Dakota which is the home state of Birchfield, limits forcible blood draws. The Birchfield court made its decision with the understanding that forcible blood draws were illegal under North Dakota law unless the driving incident involved serious injury or death. It appears that the existence of this law was a factor in the court's rationale. Therefore, taking these legal authorities into consideration, CACJ asks for the following amendments:

- 1) Adopt a code section prohibiting a forcible blood draw unless the alleged offense involves a serious injury or death. Here is what the Birchfield court noted:

Thus, it is possible to extract a blood sample from a subject who forcibly resists, but many States reasonably prefer not to take this step. See, e.g.,

Neville, 459 U. S., at 559–560. North Dakota, for example, tells us that it generally opposes this practice because of the risk of dangerous altercations between police officers and arrestees in rural areas where the arresting officer may not have backup. (Brief for Respondent in No. 14–1468, p. 29.) Under current North Dakota law, only in cases involving an accident that results in death or serious injury may blood be taken from arrestees who resist. Compare N. D. Cent. Code Ann. §§39–20–04(1), 39–20–01, with §39–20–01.1.

The court in Birchfield arrived at its decision knowing that the North Dakota law, and many other states, have adopted limits on the use of force. Thus, their decision to permit blood draws upon arrest and without a warrant was made with the understanding that law enforcement officers would not effect a "forced" blood draw unless the arrest involves a DUI with serious injury or death. However, California does not currently have such a law. Would Birchfield court have made the decision if North Dakota lacked such a limit on forced blood draws? Without creating such a limit, AB 702 could inadvertently be interpreted to provide unfettered authority to law enforcement to use physical force to stick a needle into someone's vein. CACJ asks that this bill be amended to include some limitation on the use of force, to avoid unnecessary confrontations with police officers.

Keep in mind, the McNeeley court endorsed a warrant requirement for blood draws. AB 702 circumvents this warrant requirement by reliance on California's existing "implied consent" law. However, the dangers of a forced blood draw are real. Even if someone "consented" by paying for a driver's license, at the scene of an arrest, someone's fear of needles or blood draws by police could lead to physical confrontations, especially if the individual does not consent on site to the blood draw.

Unclear and Misleading Advisements

AB 702 delineates an advisement to be proffered upon the arrest of a California driver. However, the language is confusing, contradictory and will likely lead to inadvertent chemical test refusals, as well as, improper waiver of consent. At minimum, this advisement needs to be reworked. Duress, panic, and fear are common responses in this situation. As such an advisement must be clear, concise and in plain language consistent with current law. Below is one alternative:

“You are entitled to a number of constitutional protections. This includes the right to be free from a forced blood test without a warrant. However, since you are under arrest, you are required to take a breath test to determine your blood alcohol level. If you refuse to take this test, or intentionally fail to provide a proper breath sample, you can be taken against your will to a local hospital or clinic and we will draw blood from you. If you refuse to take either a breath or blood test, your driving privileges will be suspended.”

Should blood draws be allowed pursuant to an “implied consent” law?

As we previously indicated, it is generally accepted that a blood draw is a more invasive tactic than a DUI breath test. In California, we have seen a dramatic advancement in the technology of breath test devices. Although they are not without error, the proper use of these devices lead to countless DUI convictions. California has approved mobile EPAS devices that can be used at the scene of an arrest, and whose results are admissible in court.

In light of these developments, and the invasiveness of blood draws, is it time for California to reconsider the inclusion of blood draws in the implied consent law? What is the added value? CACJ is also concerned that local law enforcement could choose to decrease their reliance on breath tests, making blood draws the only option. Nothing in AB 702 prevents this shift. CACJ believes it is time to review whether blood tests should be reserved only for DUI cases involving death or injury.

-- END --